SUBJECT: USML CONTROLLED ITEMS CONTINUE TO SELL IN JAPAN

REF: A. TOKYO 2127

1B. TOKYO 2462

Classified By: Ambassador J. Thomas Schieffer for reasons 1.4 (b) and (d).

11. (C) Summary: EmbOffs continue to work with Ministry of Defense (MOD) and Ministry of Economy, Trade and Industry (METI) officials to track the source of apparently unlicensed U.S. Munitions List (USML) controlled items, including holographic weapon scopes and hand guards being sold on Yahoo Auction Japan. These are the same type of items that were exported without a license by a U.S. citizen who implicated MOD officials in the illicit trade of weapon accessories in his statement. End Summary.

12. (C) EmbOffs recently met with Yahoo Auction Japan representatives to discuss the Internet sale of U.S. Munitions List (USML) controlled items. Yahoo Auction Japan Business Vice President Mineki Yashiro and Legal Office Representative Tatsuya Ueyama told Econoff they had been unaware of U.S. export control regulations. Ueyama said he was uncertain if Yahoo Japan could delist the items that are not illegal for sale under Japanese law since the company would need a legal framework for adopting such a policy. (Note: The sale or possession of optical units, predominately EOTech holographic weapons scopes, Night Vision Goggles and laser-guided red-point scopes, is not illegal under Japanese law. End Note)

GOJ Officials Detail Difficulty with Domestic Law

13. (C) After a U.S. citizen plead guilty July 28 to illegally exporting controlled weapon sights and hand guards to Japan, EmbOffs noted the sale of similar items on Yahoo Auction Japan and brought this to the attention of METI Export and Trade Control officials in subsequent meetings. METI Export Controls officials told EconOff they need a legal basis to take action.

14. (C) In a meeting with METI Trade Controls Deputy Director Atsushi Maruhara on August 29, Maruhara noted Japanese law does not prohibit importing optical elements, which could include night vision goggles, holographic weapons sights or laser-guided, red-point weapon scopes like those EmbOffs observed at the residence/office of LEM president (ref A). Maruhara said METI Trade Controls officials have discussed whether a more expansive interpretation of Japanese law might be possible and will consider the legal implications of including military-specification optical units under Japanese export control regulations. Noting such items are covered in the Waseenaar Agreement, Maruhara said METI officials will be flexible in the search for a mutually satisfactory solution to the problem of unlicensed USML controlled items.

NPA Continues to "Contemplate" an MOD Investigation

15. (C) Post met with National Police Agency officials October 5 to encourage them to initiate a formal investigation into the allegation that MOD officials are involved in the illicit trade. They offered no commitment to do so. The aforementioned U.S. citizen, convicted of illegal weapons accessory sales, told investigators that MOD officials introduced him to Japanese trading companies to sell USML items in Japan on the Internet. However, the only official response to this allegation thus far has been a press conference with former Defense Minister Shigeru Ishiba, in which he reviewed the known history of MOD procurement for EOTech weapon scopes.

Comment

TOKYO 00002816 002 OF 002

16. (C) We remain doubtful Japanese law enforcement officials will ratchet up the level of actions to discourage sales of unlicensed, controlled items in the near term. Japanese customs is not empowered to conduct criminal investigations and other law enforcement entities have been slow to engage. We noted a new collection of U.S. produced weapons accessories for sale on Yahoo Auctions Japan as recently as October 2 and fully expect to see future items for sale online.
